Architect Registration Professional Board (AR..Q: Running Application with variables in the middle of PHP script to store information I have a script that will be run on multiple servers every single time it is refreshed. There are variables that are assigned to the server on the initial run of the script, but they are not constant values. The variables are stored in an array at a particular point within the script: $server[]=array('content' => 'info added to server', 'minimum' => 'default value', 'desired' => 'default value'); I was wondering how I should best be storing this information. I have done some research and it seems to me that an alternative to using PDO is serializing an object. I am still learning and I am unsure which method is more appropriate. If I were to store the variables in a database, I am guessing that it may not be a good idea to store objects like this as I would be creating a lot of tiny tables. Alternatively, what is another way to store the information permanently and do it right? A: You could put the data into a cookie, and use $_COOKIE in your scripts to access the data. Cookie Example $username = $_COOKIE['username']; $password = $_COOKIE['password']; or create an object and put a load method in, example: Example Object class CookieClass { private $_cookieName; private $_cookieValue; public function __construct($cookieName, $cookieValue) { if(!isset($this->_cookieName) ||!isset($cookieValue)) { $this->_cookieName = $cookieName; $this->_cookieValue = $cookieValue; } return $this; } public function read() {
