Jimmy Butler's agent told ESPN's Brian Windhorst on Saturday that the move to the Bulls will be a "long-term thing" for the 6-foot-7 swingman. Butler, 29, has agreed to a $40 million contract. "There is a process of things that I have to do," Windhorst said. "You know when you say to someone that you love them — that is Jimmy's feeling. That's a long-term thing when you say you love someone." Windhorst said that the Butler-to-Chicago plan is for the Bulls to be a "part-time" team. "No, I don't think you can do that," he said. "The Bulls are a perennial, perennial title contender. They want to win. That's one thing that this Jimmy Butler signing ... they want to win and that's OK with me." The Bulls believe they will have a big-time player in the backcourt after signing free agent Dwyane Wade to a two-year, $40 million deal. Wade, a two-time champion, was a key part of the Bulls' 2011 title run. "With Wade, the Bulls have all the things they need to contend for a title," Windhorst said. "They have gotten all their assets because of the (financial) issues they had last year. They have a new stadium. They have a great coach." Windhorst said that Butler probably will play a larger role in
