But a new survey suggests that even Democrats — at least the ones who voted for Hillary Clinton — are moving in the opposite direction, against bipartisanship. The recent AP-GfK poll found that 45 percent of Democrats said they agreed with the statement, “Things have gotten so bad that we need a leader who can bring people together.” On the other side of the spectrum, 45 percent said they agreed with the statement, “Things have gotten so bad that we need a leader who can get things done.” Clinton won the popular vote by nearly 2.8 million votes. Seventy-four percent of Republicans agreed that the country’s broken, and that a leader is needed who will “get things done.” Just 24 percent said the country needs a leader who can “bring people together.” Only 46 percent of Republicans agreed with Clinton’s statement about needing to “get things done.” Seventy-eight percent agreed with her statement about being willing to “bring people together.” The AP poll also found that Republican voters are about evenly split on approving of Trump’s personality and character; it found 62 percent of Republican voters believe he has a poor or terrible personality and character. By comparison, 59 percent of Democrats say they believe he has a good personality and character, and only 37 percent say they do not believe he has good personality and character. Seventy-five percent of Republicans said that they do not believe Clinton has a good personality and character. Story continues Looking for further insight into the 2016 race, the AP-GfK poll also looked into the perception of several candidates. Among Democrats, 46 percent believe Clinton has the best
