software junkie, specializing in Adobe Photoshop, Flash and other Adoberelated products. Jacob has been a part of the InfoToday.com team since 2004 and is an expert in a variety of topics including Mac, Web, graphic design and more.(b)(1)(i). In addition, the regulations expressly require the trial court to specify that the defendant has the right to a jury trial when it is giving the post-conviction relief defendant notice of the right to a jury trial, as the trial court did here. See 8C DCMR §§ 251.3, 251.6 (2006). These considerations are additional reasons why we reject the Government's argument that the denial of a jury trial is not a "final order" for the purposes of appeal. The Government also argues that, in any event, the order denying the post-conviction relief defendant's demand for a jury trial is not a final order because the trial court reserved its ruling on the appeal of that denial and, in any event, the trial court did not issue the final order denying post-conviction relief. This argument was not raised in the Government's motion to dismiss, however, so we express no view on its merit. [11] As we have noted, in 2007 the District of Columbia, following the lead of the federal courts, enacted legislation providing a right to appeal orders denying post-conviction relief. See D.C.Code § 23-110 (2009 Repl.). Our analysis in this case is equally applicable to orders in those cases.
[12] Petitioners argue that this court does not have jurisdiction to hear this appeal because the notice of appeal was not filed within the thirty-day time limit of D.C.Code § 23-110(a) (2006 Repl.). The Government responds that the appeal was timely filed because it was filed within thirty days after the denial of Petitioners' motion to reopen. Although Petitioners are correct that the time limit in section 23-110(a) is jurisdictional, see, e.g., Burkey v. United States,
