In 1997, the Internet was first marketed by IBM to attract the interest of corporations who wanted to connect their networks and develop new products. The UNIX operating system, first developed by Bell Labs, was the most popular software platform in the industry at that time. With the introduction of the World Wide Web and Hypertext Transfer Protocol (HTTP) in the early nineties, coupled with the developing Web server technology, the Internet was on its way to becoming an essential element of most homes and businesses. In 2000, India was the first country to have an official Internet country code top-level domain (ccTLD), .IN. The Internet became a part of our daily lives and facilitated the growth of a new culture which was later known as the Internet Culture. In 2004, Google made its debut on the Web with the search engine. With its vast knowledge of Internet culture and huge advertising budget, Google has gradually been a major player in the online world. The Internet has also become an integral part of the lives of most people as it facilitates their interaction with the world. With the help of Internet technology, our daily lives have become more vibrant and connected. In 2012, the Internet is even more than a medium of communication but a means of learning, and education has become a part of the Internet culture. The Internet is now a resource of data and knowledge. About Us About Us - At 'Internet Culture' we often quote that "The Internet is an instrument of revolution" and we believe that the Internet has played an important role in creating a new culture in the recent years. As the world keeps connecting online with the help of the Internet, its popularity keeps on growing. This has led to a growth in the global Internet industry. We at 'Internet Culture' strive to bring you interesting and informative information about the current events of the international Internet Industry in the form of articles, news, and blogs to keep you updated
