I want to store blobs in my database, but I don't want to have to perform loads or writes of files on the filesystem to do so. Can I upload data directly to my database? If so, can the data be retrieved by selecting the blobId and loading it to a file? If not, is there some sort of in-memory blob store that can be used so that the data can be written or read without going to the filesystem. Or, is this really a limitation of Django, and if so, is there a way around it? A: The Django has no built-in support for cloud-storage for images or other binary data. Q: Basic Modular Arithmetic Question This is a simple question, but I am unsure how to interpret a practical example: Let $a \equiv 5$ and $b \equiv 3$ in $\mathbb{Z}/12\mathbb{Z}$. Calculate: $\sum_{i=1}^{570} a + 2141b$
