For technical issues this is very useful, but a simpleFrequency of HPV subtypes in urine of male sex workers. We studied the prevalence of HPV infection in male sex workers (MSW) in two separate samples at the same time period (2008) in the state of São Paulo, Brazil. The first part of the study was an interview and physical exam of the participants to select those who would provide urine samples. HPV genotyping was carried out by PCR on urinary samples of the selected MSW by sequencing. Age-matched and sexually inactive men were also included in the study. HPV was detected in the urine of 48.5% (15/31) MSW and 9.4% (4/42) age-matched men ($p=0.0058$). The most prevalent genotype found in MSW was HPV66, found in 8 (22.9%) participants. Genotype HPV81 was the most prevalent in age-matched men (2/42, 4.8%). There was a high rate of HPV infection in MSW, although the rate was lower than that found in other populations. The high frequency of some genotypes among MSW highlights the need for more extensive research regarding these infections in male sex workers, not only to understand their clinical features, but also because of their importance in the pathogenesis of anal and penile cancers and cervical cancer.
