A new trailer for the upcoming Android movie “The Path” has been released. The movie is an adaptation of a book by Max Phillips, which has just been published in July 2014. The story is about a paranoid schizophrenic and his “path” which leads him along a path of destruction. The movie will star Dakota Fanning, and with a little help from her schedule she is flying back to the Los Angeles area and will start filming. The whole movie is about 24 hours. The entire movie is based on a solitary walk by a serial killer. He observes a path which continues for hours and stops to kill. The movie is not based on any real person, so that’s why no real names are used. A pre-production version of the trailer can be viewed below: “The Path” has also got a release date set for November 28th. Fans are excited to see where things take place in the movie and how it will end. It is reported that Dakota Fanning will get a nomination for a Golden Globe. She will also get two nominations for the Screen Actors Guild Awards for Outstanding Performance by a Female Actress in a Supporting Role and Outstanding Performance by a Female Actor in a Supporting Role. Despite having an interesting plot the trailer did not impress fans. The trailer was not very focused on Dakota Fanning, and in the end all it showed was Dakota Fanning. Dakota Fanning herself expressed her thoughts on the trailer: “I’ve had a full day, I’ve had fun. I was just waking up, enjoying the moment.” “We have a pretty big responsibility being a character, we’ve got to keep it light. It’s a job, you do the work and then enjoy your moments.” It’s a good thing that Dakota Fanning’s acting isn’t checked out and she’s practicing with her acting skills. Her teacher’s advice to her was to always be prepared and be confident. This is a good way to face the big screen. She also mentioned that she was receiving special training by a great acting coach. Hopefully we will see her acting skills improved once she goes back to Vancouver after the movie’s release. Q: Mocking Services that return `HttpResponse` object using `SpringBootTest` `SpringBootTest` is being deprecated: According to the announcement, it is advised to use `@WebMvcTest`, which is what I am now using, since the only difference is the use of `@WebMvc` annotation. For both `@WebMvcTest` and `@SpringBootTest`, they share the same principle: Spring Boot's `ApplicationRunner` starts an embedded Tomcat container that listens on port 8080 for HTTP requests. According to the documentation, I should be able to add `http.port=8080` as a test setting in my `application.properties` file so that the test container will listen on that port. Now, let's say I want to test a Controller (Spring Boot) that redirects to another Action (Rest Controller). I want to inject a mocked Service to the controller and assert that the response is returned. However, because I'm using `MockMvc`, I don't get a `HttpResponse` object from the controller, so I cannot compare it. The only way I can think of doing this is to use `MockMvcBuilders.webApplicationContextSetup(webApplicationContext)`. I am aware that this can be done in `@SpringBootTest`. I'm wondering if there is a similar way to mock the response for `@WebMvcTest`. A: There are different ways to test Servlet/Controller/etc with a mocked backend. You have to find the one you like best. In Spring Boot 1.3 it's the `spring-test` documentation. Annotation-Based It's the easiest, but it has one big drawback: Your tests will only work for Spring Boot 1.3 and higher. Otherwise, you will need to use the JUnit 5 based Spring Test. use `MockedMvcTest` With this test type (Spring) you have to write the configuration manually, but it's the most flexible. you can use a custom `MvcResultMatcher` Look at the `spring-test` documentation to get an example. With `MockHttpServletRequest` You can use the `RequestConfig` object to simulate any kind of request. So it's a very versatile solution. An ancient, almost forgotten variety of human physical diversity, brown dwarfs are a type of
