Back in 2008, when Republicans were still reeling from Barack Obama's candidacy, they knew they needed a way to make it appear that voters had rejected him. And so, as I've explained, they created a machine that was meant to draw a statistical line in the sand between the 2008 and 2012 elections. Ad Policy In the main, the lie was pretty transparent. The purpose of the program was to create the illusion of Obama support among Republican-leaning voters—Republican-leaning voters who had voted for him in 2008—in order to rig the 2012 election and make sure Mitt Romney won. That lie was on full display last night, when the RNC voted to reverse course on a 2012 electoral map that openly embraced the Romney-Bush map from 2008. Now the party is trying to pretend that they had no idea that the plan

LikeQuick Remote Control Desktop is an application that allows you to remotely control a Mac from a Windows-based PC. It has been developed for Mac OS only. It is possible to use this application with your Android smartphone, tablet or even your Windows phone, but the iOS version is still in development. In this tutorial, we will be discussing the most important features of LikeQuick Remote Control Desktop. We will also be covering how to install the tool. Launch a remote control desktop remotely The first thing you need to do when using LikeQuick Remote Control Desktop is to launch the program from your Mac. It will not start if you launch it from your Windows system. In order to launch the program, you need to first click on the LikeQuick icon located at the bottom-right corner of the screen. You should then click on the "Launch" button. You can now select the application you want to run, either LikeQuick Remote Control Desktop or any other Mac-based application. Using the remote control desktop to control your computer Once you have set up your Mac and launched your application, you can switch to full-screen mode and use the two largest buttons to jump to the next slide or move back one. You can also use the app to zoom
