the prevalence of anti-HCV antibodies in selected groups of Vietnamese prisoners. Sera from 502 prisoners from the central (Vietnam), southern (Vietnam) and northern (Cambodia) regions of Vietnam were examined for the presence of anti-HCV antibodies. Positive cases were retested and confirmed by a second generation ELISA system. 34.5% of the prisoners were anti-HCV-positive. The highest anti-HCV prevalence was observed among prisoners who had a history of drug injection and/or history of blood transfusion in the past. Antibodies were found in all central and southern regions and also in the largest prison in the north. The prevalence of anti-HCV among Vietnamese prisoners, especially those with a history of drug injection and/or blood transfusion in the past, is very high. This observation is alarming and underscores the need for routine HCV screening of such groups of prisoners in other parts of the world.

Jailhouse Rock (1957 film) Jailhouse Rock is a 1957 American Technicolor prison film directed by Herbert Biberman and starring Elvis Presley as the title character. Unlike most of Elvis' films, it was actually staged at a real prison, Folsom Prison. It was shot on location at the U.S. Federal penitentiary in the Midwest, in California, and in New York City. Due to the controversial nature of the subject matter, the makers were forced to contact the Federal Bureau of Prisons to obtain permission for the filming, since the sets were so realistic. The film was released in Europe as Alcatraz Island, in New Zealand as Prisoner 115, and in India as Jailhouse rock. In 1972, it was re-released in Europe and Japan as The Prisoner. In addition to Elvis and Priscilla Presley, the film also features real-life inmates, who appear as the various bank robbers. One of the main
