Some tutorials teach you how to design a logo using Photoshop, but they do not teach you how to design a layout for a logo or template for a website. Photoshop is a versatile program. But what are the best techniques to use in Photoshop for creating layouts? You may find some information here that you can use in your own design work. Creating a template for easy repeatable layouts Templates are especially helpful when designing a logo or template for an application. They provide a set of built-in blocks with preselected sizes that you can copy and modify. You can also create your own sets of blocks to use. Creating a logo template To create a simple template for a logo, follow these steps: 1. Choose File⇒New⇒Other. 2. Choose Blank File and browse to the folder that contains your files and click Save to open the New Blank File dialog box. 3. In the Source area, select JPEG File and then click OK. 4. In the Destination area, navigate to the Save Drafts folder. 5. Enter an optional descriptive name for the template in the Name field. 6. Choose Enter Full Screen from the Scale area of the dialog box. 7. Select Desired Width and Desired Height and leave Width and Height at Default. 8. To create a repeat of your logo, choose Select the Same Size from the Resample section of the dialog box. 9. (Optional) Open your logo and place it in the center of the canvas. 10. Click the Resample button. 11. Click the rectangle selection tool. 12. Drag the selection to the right to create a repeat of the logo. 13. Click Selection⇒Create Clipping Mask. 14. On the New Layer menu at the bottom of the Layers panel, select Edit. 15. Double-click the new layer to place it in the New Layer dialog box. 16. Select Flip H Horizontal from the drop-down menu and then click OK. 17. Name the layer the same as the name of the file you just resized, and then click OK. 18. If you want to edit the layer, you can do so now, or keep it as a placeholder. Creating a layout template A template is usually a rectangular grid of pre-created

Exploring sound and deafness Menu Month: November 2013 When the web audio API was announced a few years ago, I saw it as a new potential for online learning. Because the browser supports a variety of input and output devices, it would be easy to use recorded audio from all kinds of devices, such as smart phones, desktops, laptops, tablets, and game consoles. That's not how things panned out. Like the rest of the web development community, the audio team has never been terribly interested in developing audio web apps. Just as soon as these apps got useful enough, they were quickly overtaken by native apps. Or was it? Over the last few years, one of the bigger innovations has been to use HTML5 to build desktop apps. This provides a powerful way to build native apps with a web interface. And it's now possible to build this native app with the Android and iOS development tools. There are of course, plenty of blogs and other documents explaining how to build the app. The cool part is that you can use web audio API to provide an awesome media player to these native apps. This can be an amazingly slick media player that feels exactly like a native app. So when you launch it for the first time, you'll be asking yourself, "wait, this is a web app?" And it is. The audio API is new, and not many people are writing web audio apps. But when you start to get into the details of it, you start to realize that the API is very powerful. You can do things that would be very difficult to do if you were trying to do it with native apps. The audio team wants to use the web audio API to create a Web Audio playground. This is a place where you can play with audio effects in a web browser. First of all, what could be more fun than an online impromptu jazz jam that you can play in your web browser? There are just a few things that I'm not very clear about yet. Because some of the demos are very basic, I'm not sure how they'll interact with modern browsers. In particular, a few of the demos don't seem to work in the latest versions of Chrome or Firefox. Unfortunately, I can't get those latest versions to run on my computer, so I can't test them. Hopefully this will

Q: how to make a file download link by javascript? I am new to the web development. I created one project on a free hosting like 000webhost, I want to make a download link on the same page by JavaScript. Because I don't have access to php and can not change the source code of this project. A: Here is what you need to do. First, put the download link into a div with id file_link. Then, you need to call the window.open() method. var file_download_link = 'Download'; document.getElementById('file_link').innerHTML = file_download_link; window.open(file_link.href, "_blank"); You may need to cross-browserify your file_link_id variable if it does not work in IE. Good luck! $0.517 + 0.083$. What is the third biggest value in $-4, -1, b?$ -4 Let $y(w) = w + 10$. Let g be $y(-12)$. Let p be $40/(-25) - -2 - 17/60$. Let $o = -2 + 1$. Wh
