Autodesk 360 Media Marketing Autodesk 360 Media Marketing (formerly 3DCart) is a new offering by Autodesk. Introduced in October 2014, it is Autodesk's cloud based software service for creating, distributing and managing visual content. History Autodesk was founded as a company in 1984 by a group of MIT graduates to commercialize computer-aided design tools that had been developed at MIT for the academic market. In May 2009, Autodesk acquired Leonardo, which is described as a "virtual production line for film, television, gaming and web." In June 2010, Autodesk acquired 3ds Max, a provider of a 3D modeling and animation software used by video game developers, graphic designers, and industrial designers. The company was an early adopter of open-source software, launching the Autodesk Source (formerly A360) platform in 2007, which supports contributions to Autodesk products via the Autodesk Community Portal. This project was also used by Autodesk in their acquisition of sourceforge, as one of the reasons why they made the move to switch from the Sourceforge repository to GitHub. Autodesk's CEO, Carl Bass, announced in late 2009 that the company would shift its focus away from its traditional software business. In February 2011, Autodesk acquired CloudCompare, a platform which aggregates various services such as storage and network bandwidth. In August 2012, Autodesk acquired Macaw, a design collaboration and documentation management tool. In February 2014, Autodesk acquired Meraki, a company specializing in the Internet of things (IoT). On July 21, 2015, Autodesk closed down its India operation. On November 10, 2015, Autodesk was awarded "Champion of Industry" by the Financial Times for their 2014 innovation ranking. In February 2016, Autodesk acquired Rhino. In September 2017, Autodesk acquired the digital publishing platform Print Designer, and the motion graphics platform After Effects. On April 17, 2018, Autodesk announced the acquisition of the Israeli engineering and construction software company Cadence in a deal valued at around $925 million. On April 16, 2019, Autodesk announced the acquisition of Element AI, a software company which focuses on data-driven technologies and enterprise software for artificial intelligence. In October 2019, Autodesk announced the acquisition of Vector a1d647c406
