The purpose of this study was to compare the morphological and molecular features of bone formation in mouse and rabbit parietal bones. The mouse parietal bone was harvested from wild-type mice under ether anesthesia and the rabbit parietal bone was harvested from New Zealand white rabbits using a previously described procedure. Histological sections and undecalcified specimens of parietal bone were prepared. In the mouse, osteoblasts were present on trabecular bone surfaces even at the ultrastructural level, and proliferative and mature osteoblasts were observed. In the rabbit, osteoblasts were rare on trabecular bone surfaces, but they were recognizable at the ultrastructural level and proliferation of osteoblasts was evident. In addition, osteoblasts were recognized on the endosteal surface of the rabbit parietal bone. The occurrence of osteoblasts on the endosteal surface was rare in the mouse. Quantitative reverse transcription polymerase chain reaction analysis showed that expression of alpha1(I) collagen and osteopontin mRNAs were significantly higher in the rabbit than in the mouse. In the mouse, the expression of alpha1(I) collagen, osteonectin, osteopontin, and Runx2 mRNAs was higher in the rapid-growing area than in the slow-growing area. Immunohistochemical staining showed that Runx2 was not expressed in the bone surface, but osteocalcin was expressed. These results suggest that in the mouse, bone formation is maintained by osteoblasts on the trabecular bone surface, and that in the rabbit, bone formation is maintained by bone-lining osteoblasts./* eslint-disable no-bitwise */ export const set = (x,  $y, z) => (x &= y) | (x &= z) | (x &= ~y); export const binarySums = (x, y) => x.reduce((a, b, i) => { a.f[i] = a.f[i] || {};$  $a.f[i][x[i]] = a.f[i][x[i]] || {}; a.f[i][x[i]]$

The city hosts and runs many small and large annual festivals with many performing arts, music, visual arts and food events. The Sydney Festival of Arts A week-long arts festival held every spring, the Sydney Festival is Australia's largest festival of the arts. Related articles Annual spring festival In July 2011, the New South Wales Government, in partnership with the NSW Arts Council, opened Sydney's first performing arts precinct at the Drama Theatre on Kent Street. Related articles The New Theatre was officially opened in 2000, following the reconstruction of the existing Drama Theatre building at Kent and Cambridge Streets. The theatre was constructed by William Mitchell, with a design similar to the nearby Sydney Opera House, with two levels of seating and a 250-seat orchestra pit. The precinct includes four theatres, a concert hall, music school and a number of art galleries, including the New South Wales Art Gallery. The dramatic facilities and galleries replace the St James Theatre, which was used for Equity and Australian rules football matches. Performing arts Performing arts include opera, theatre, dance, comedy, music, circus, musical theatre, ballet, comedy and pantomime. Jazz at the George Since its inception in 2007, Jazz at the George has been a highlight of the annual Sydney Festival of Arts. Concerts are held in the historic surroundings of the Metropolitan Theatre, located in Kings Cross. The stages and seating is laid out to resemble a concert hall, with its stage and orchestra pit. Sydney Opera House The Sydney Opera House (also known as the Harbor Theatre) is Sydney's most iconic and best loved concert hall. It was built in 1954.
