with music and moaning not so much ... Since my car almost instantly mutinied on me, just prior to getting into (and slightly into) the turnoff for the campground, I decided to skip my first night in Santa Fe ... My next day would be a morning of exploring. After all, I still had four and a half quarters of music to catch up on. (Oops - nope, probably not enough yuletide music in my collection ...) I had my backpack waiting for me at the carport, the tires of my bike are still spinning along with me despite the car trouble, and my eyes have been adjusted to the bright sun. The only thing I had to worry about was actually hiking to the nearest first class letterbox in the forest where I could be certain that the "AM" would be waiting for me ... I had already crossed the last bridge into the town of Santa Fe. And, at least as far as I could tell, I was on the right track ... The "first" mailbox up ahead was marked with a red star. And, with only about 30 feet to go, I could walk in and mail the envelope confident that I'd soon find out all the ways that the designators of the NATO letterboxes were being changed just for our benefit ... I'm not sure exactly why, but I somehow expected to come across a Soviet general for myself. (Well, maybe it

no Matsuri Kiiroi Hana no Matsuri (花のまつり) is the name of a festival held in Japan during the month of November. It is held in a variety of Kuramae town in Fukushima prefecture in the Tohoku region. Attendance usually starts in mid-October, with about 200,000 people coming from various places in Japan, including Akita, Yamagata, Miyagi, Yamaguchi, and Kyūshū. The most common places of worship are Ōkoma Shrine and Tateyama Shrine. This is the original Hana no Matsuri in Japan, and became a national event in Japan in 1994. The festival is held at the autumn-viewing and autumn-planting park known as Furumaki Matsuri in a region which is known as the "Grape Isle" (ugu suiso), an auspicious place of many Japanese spirits. The festival celebrates and honors the spirits attached with herbs used in the cultivation of grapes. They are called "Okoma no Kami" and "Tateyama no Kami" for the places of Ōkoma and Tateyama, respectively. This site is believed to be the place where ancient people were first able to enjoy and perpetuate the culture that has become the major sugar source of Japan. Many of the Matsuri festivities in this region are held on the side of Mount Osore, and in some places, the whole site is collectively referred to as the "Mikasa Kuramae Jinja".

History
At the autumn of 680, Teruge no Kawaji no Tsubone visited Kuramae, and was surprised to see the shrine and field where the people were gathering along the road on the hillside. At that time, the fashion of the people was changing and the national custom of gathering in a number of places in a number of regions started with Furumaki Matsuri. Furumaki Onsen Furumaki Matsuri is widely known as the Furumaki Matsuri in Kuramae and in a broader sense, this is the original Hana no Matsuri which was held around the year 680 AD. Kuramae, which had become a winter resort town, decided to hold the "Furumaki Matsuri" on Mount Osore, and so the event was established. As a result of that, people came to this region which
