“Simulating high-level play is only possible with a great deal of data collected from real players in a wide range of environments. We’ve taken all of this information and have been able to use it to create not only more realistic visuals, but also gameplay that is suited to the new HyperMotion Technology,” explains EA SPORTS FIFA Lead Producer Peter Betts. Adding to the realism of the game, the technology leverages motion capture data acquired from actual footballers playing in motion capture suits. The in-game captures allow players to run naturally over specific ground surfaces, to link and tackle accurately, and to create a real sense of fluid movement. Fans will be able to capture this real football experience by downloading the FIFA 22 Transfer Update on PlayStation 4 and Xbox One, Windows PC and PlayStation 3, and the FIFA 22 Ultimate Team Legends Update on Xbox One and PlayStation 3. Players will be able to customise their players with enhanced animations in the new FM-focused “Man of the Match” and “Bench Coach” modes. In FM™, every player and gameplay situation is now fully customisable. For the first time, the “Play Style” system lets you customise full sets of FM player attributes, including attributes like positioning, intensity, tackling, anticipation, stamina, power, vision, intelligence and off-the-ball movement to create a different-looking team that suits your play style. The new FM goalkeeper technique is also available, offering a more controlled shot by using specific footwork and positioning when goalkeeper moves. FIFA 22 is also the first FIFA title to feature tactical substitutions, available to managers in-game. FIFA 22 will be released worldwide on 19 October. FIFA 22 on PlayStation 4, Xbox One and Windows PC is available now for pre-order at select retailers. FIFA 22 on PlayStation 3 and Xbox 360 is available now. Interested in more EA Sports news?
