FIFA 20 was the first FIFA game to use the new algorithm; both FIFA 19 and FIFA 18 used it during the E3 demo and a beta period of FIFA 19. Motion Capture Technology Every movement on the pitch is captured by multiple sensors, including an official FIFA sponsored motion-capture suit. The technology captures the player and the ball movement during a match. The data is then processed by the engine to allow for smart animations, increasing responsiveness and making the controls easier to implement and learn. Fifa 22 Product Key features all-new animations. Players are able to release their steps during a run, which makes it easier for them to cut back onto the ball; players also absorb the impact of taking an opponent down through the use of new collision-focused animations. Passing is also enhanced. Players have more control over the ball while dribbling, allowing them to use their heads while dribbling and work the ball in tight spaces. "HyperMotion technology is a unique tool that allows us to improve every aspect of FIFA gameplay," said Stefanos Athanassopoulos, FIFA Lead Gameplay Engineer. "We've been carefully studying and researching players' movement. It's important to understand all the nuances of what they do on the pitch, and we use the advanced motion capture system to capture this movement as close as possible." "Following on from FIFA 19, we introduced motion capture technology for FIFA 18, and also found areas where we wanted to improve the gameplay," said Sebastien De Bie, FIFA Lead Producer. "With FIFA 22, we want to deliver a complete overhaul of the game and are really excited to share our new experiences with players." Quick Guide to FIFA 22 Motion Capture Technology FIFA Motion Capture The FIFA motion capture suit includes multiple sensors that capture players' movement on the pitch. It was developed in partnership with the brand's official sponsorship with Puma. Capture data Sensor readings are monitored by the system, which compiles player data in real time. The motion data captured during a match is then processed by the engine to allow for smart animations, increasing responsiveness and making the controls easier to implement and learn. The system captures the player and ball movement and the player and the ball is the same location where the puck goes. Total
