We specialize in advanced energy technology and services, delivering innovative solutions to maximize power and reduce costs. Homepage: www.abnenergy.com A large data center can consume 15-50 MW of power. These data centers often need to be cooled in part by a natural or forced air system. In small facilities data centers have been the rule rather than the exception and individualized cooling systems may be sufficient. In medium and larger facilities data centers are often included in larger HVAC systems. In most cases the system designer provides the system to the energy facility management (EFM) team and the energy facility management team provides the HVAC design to the data center team. The data center team provides the data center layout and the HVAC design is made to work with the existing data center. The HVAC design is then rolled into the overall facility ventilation design to determine the number and type of fans needed and the placement of the fans. DC 100 10 1 1 0.
