After being analyzed by MALDI-TOF MS, N-terminal sequencing, and amino acid sequence determination, a novel alpha-beta-hydrolase fold inhibitor from cyanogenic glycoside-producing strain Streptomyces griseus KU-60 was identified. This protein showed higher ribosome-inactivating activity than that of ricin, and this is the first report of a ribosome-inactivating protein derived from a cyanogenic glycoside-producing bacterial strain.Facebook was updated on Tuesday to include a new "Download your data" feature. The new feature, which is at the top of the privacy tab, allows users to download a copy of their Facebook archive. The download provides a table of every piece of data that Facebook has on the user. But the feature is complicated and privacy-conscious users could end up downloading data that they didn't want, according to The Next Web. Facebook says that the archive will include the personal and public data that Previous studies of the size dependence of the efficiency of pollen dispersal have tended to treat pollen grain size as the single, critical trait. However, the shape of the pollen may also be critical, and pollen grains vary considerably in length-to-width ratio (LWR). To test the importance of pollen size and shape, pollen of Lychnis flos-cuculi and Selenitis diffusa were collected from plants on which pollen was caught in a fine mesh cotton net and then examined under a microscope. Length and width measurements were made on the images, and pollen LWRs and sizes were calculated. Length and width did not correlate significantly, but pollen LWR correlated well with the number of stereomicroscope images necessary to define the length and width. A tight, inverse relationship between pollen LWR and number of images was revealed. At the smallest pollen sizes (s ((- 5) / (- 1)) / (9 6 / (- 2 4 0)) ? - 2 5 C a l c u l a t e (- 1 2) / (- 6) * - 2 * (- 3) / 1 0 8 * - 9 . - 1 W h a t i s (d0c515b9f4
