To investigate the antiviral activities of the aqueous extract of Isatis root and its polysaccharide against the hepatitis C virus (HCV). In addition, to analyze the secondary chemical structures of the polysaccharide, and to explore the mechanism of the antiviral effects of the Isatis root. The HCV-induced effects in Huh7 cells were evaluated by MTT assay. The levels of viral RNA, viral protein, and the secretion of inflammatory cytokines were analyzed by quantitative PCR, Western blotting, and ELISA, respectively. The Isatis root and its polysaccharide inhibited the HCV-induced hepatic inflammation in Huh7 cells in a dose-dependent manner. Both Isatis root and its polysaccharide inhibited HCV replication and the secretion of interferon- $\alpha$  (IFN- $\alpha$ ), interleukin (IL)-6, and tumor necrosis factor- $\alpha$  (TNF- $\alpha$ ). The polysaccharide had stronger antiviral activity than the crude aqueous extract of Isatis root. The structures of the aqueous extract of Isatis root and its polysaccharide were analyzed by gas chromatography and high-performance gel permeation chromatography. The results indicated that the aqueous extract of Isatis root contained both acetylated and neutral monosaccharides, and the antiviral activity was likely correlated with the amounts of the acetylated and neutral monosaccharides. Isatis root and its polysaccharide may be potentially useful for the treatment of HCV infection.
