How to Use Color Correction in Photoshop Elements Photoshop Elements allows you to correct individual colors in your photo. We'll use the hue slider and the picker tool to do a little colorizing. You can click the Eyedropper tool to sample an existing color from your photo and then drag the swatch to adjust the color. Click the Paint Bucket tool. Click each color in the photograph and drag the Paint Bucket tool to sample the color. After sampling the color, click the Eyedropper tool and click the Paint Bucket tool to set the color. Click the Hue/Saturation dialog box. Click the Chroma/Hue button to open the dialog box. Adjust the Hue slider to your desired color. Adjust the Saturation slider to your desired percentage of saturation. This is often used to increase or decrease the saturation of the color. The Saturation value should not be applied to objects that are pure black or white. To adjust the brightness of a color, move the Brightness slider. You can adjust the amount of contrast by moving the Contrast slider. The Color Balance dialog box has controls for warming or cooling your color.

This invention relates to cationic lipid/plasmid DNA complexes which can be used to introduce exogenous DNA into cells in vitro and in vivo. Synthetic cationic lipid/DNA complexes have been used to introduce DNA into a variety of cell lines in culture. Generally, relatively low transfection efficiency and cytotoxicity have been observed. Arrhenius and coworkers have shown that the transfection efficiency of polyamine/DNA liposome complexes is significantly increased in the presence of polyvinylpyrrolidone (PVP). Arrhenius, E., Arrhenius, H., Nagaraj, A. and Panavas, I. (1992). Transfection of growth hormone secreting rat pituitary tumor cells by synthetic cationic liposomes with and without PVP. Gene. 114, 1-4. However, the liposome complexes with PVP are very toxic to cells because polyvinylpyrrolidone is charged, hydrophilic, and a large hydrophilic particle. The large particle results in direct contact between the cytosol and the particles and can lead to osmotic cell lysis. In order to improve transfection efficiency and cytotoxicity, the complex should be as small as possible while still remaining cationic and having a sufficiently high positive charge.

Recurrent tricuspid valve insufficiency and pulmonary venous obstruction in an adult. We report on a patient with a history of both neonatal and adult respiratory distress syndrome (ARDS) treated since infancy with extracorporeal membrane oxygenation (ECMO) for severe respiratory failure. At the age of 31 years he presented with acute right heart failure. An obstructive cardio-pulmonary vascular pathologic syndrome was suspected on transthoracic echocardiography and further evaluated by cardiac catheterization. Pathologic anatomy on right heart bypass revealed severely diminished tricuspid valve opening and no significant regurgitation. On pulmonary venography, a significant stenosis of the right pulmonary veins was discovered. The patient was successfully treated by surgical correction of the tricuspid valve and the pulmonary venous obstruction.
