Trip Tuesday, July 21, 2018 11:22 AM | Deleted user 22 Jul 2018 06:27AM This is simply a very funny yet very sad story about a retrofuturistic life not so far from our own. This happened last year to the writer of this post, but I had to edit it a bit before posting it here. I do believe you will enjoy it. What you may not enjoy is what it will do to you. Stay with it until the end, no matter how you feel. I invited my friends Jason, Jake, and Nate up to Cape Cod for my 40th birthday. Nate was my roommate in college, Jake is a friend of mine, Jason is Jason. Yes, I know that there were others that went, but I only invited the 3 of them. I wanted to keep it a small group that I could relax with, and we did. My significant other Sarah was also a part of this retreat and is my soulmate. As you can see there were 3 couples, and since we had been going out for a while, they had already committed to being friends for the trip. We were quite stable, that is until we made these 4 getaways to Cape Cod. Keep in mind, we are all adults at 25, 26, and 29. A couple of us were married with 2 kids and married to the friend we used to smoke with, and the other 2 were still dating their long time "friend-girlfriends" (you'll see what I mean in a moment) together for the last 12 years. Our main goal was to get away together. And this is where the strange thing started. The Journey We departed on Thursday to get the train to New York where we would take flight to Rockland via Delta. I had a bad experience with Delta so I switched to Cape Air. Low and behold the cost of Delta flights are more expensive than Cape Air so I started looking at ways to cut costs. Here were our options: Flying Flightless While looking at the flights I saw that the flight prices were much cheaper than renting a van and drive to Cape Cod. Why? Because Cape Air has the cheapest flight price of almost $500 with free baggage. To me, that's ridiculous. But I thought my husband wouldn't mind driving because the way we go places is pretty expensive. We rented a 10 seater van
