Add Bash functionality to Command Prompt Some highlight features supported by Clink include new keyboard shortcuts and scriptable completion (using the Lua intuitive language). History and settings are remembered between sessions. Also, it's no longer necessary to confirm batch job termination messages since this is done automatically by the utility. This can be disabled, however. During installation, the tool offers to replace Command Prompt. Afterward, it can be launched from its own executable file or by running cmd.exe. Familiar key bindings for quickly executing commands When it comes to keyboard shortcuts, you can paste from the clipboard with Ctrl+V, perform incremental history searches with Ctrl+R and Ctrl+S, enable completion with TAB, undo actions with Ctrl+Z, and run automatic "cd.." with Ctrl+Alt+U, among others. All supported bindings can be listed in the console with Alt+H. Configure settings and create completion matches Settings can be configured using the "set" command (clink set --help). For example, you can set the Ctrl+D hotkey to exit the process when pressed on an empty link (ctrld_exits), ignore lines that begin with whitespace when adding lines to history (history_ignore_space), or use color to display matches (match_colour). Clink's functionality can be extended by creating completion matches with Lua scripts.
