There are 2 types of gameplay features powered by HyperMotion technology; Player Trajectories, which track all player movements in space and time, and Player Intelligence, which analyses the data to develop physical behaviours that reflect real player play. These new features are also accompanied by adjustments to the game engine. "We are excited to use the data of 22 real-life players playing an intense match together and find fresh ways to bring the rich play of HyperMotion technology to the FIFA franchise. The fidelity of the player behaviours are a direct result of the power and precision of the game engine, and also our development team's experience and skill in tweaking the actual game model," said Ludwig Hilberath, FIFA Director at EA Canada. The following new features power FIFA 22: Player Trajectories - Players are no longer bound to the same set of pre-planned animations, but can now learn and respond to their environment with new gameplay behaviours inspired by the movements of 22 real-life players. In addition, movement is no longer a cue for AI reaction. AI players now show emotions as they play, showing more emotional expressions as they build up to a goal. From a more tactical perspective, when the ball is out of play, players can now readjust their formation to better suit their offensive and defensive set-ups. Player Intelligence - Enhanced player intelligence and play styles are now driven by the data of 22 real-life players. This includes new AI behaviour choices that take into account specific player attributes, such as timing and positioning. In particular, pre-planned behaviours can now be impacted by player traits, including personality, style of play and technical ability. This opens up more player creativity, strategy and unpredictability when playing the game. Algorithmic Player Trajectories - In-game physics engine is smarter, and player outcomes are now impacted by the patterns of movement, every player's movement, and how they combine with other player movement. The direction, magnitude and timing of impacts can vary depending on the distance between the interaction. What a player chooses to do is now an algorithmic choice, rather than being pre-scripted. High-intensity Football Match HD - Immersive audio design and day/night cycles support up to 90 players on the pitch at any one time. Players now have the choice to control the pace of their game and switch to lower intensity modes if they prefer. Live Traffic - Complete new single-player and multiplayer

Impact Control, where players can change the physics of a shot or free kick, has also been refined and players have access to new tools like the ability to alter and control where the ball rebounds from the net. Additional improvements have been made to ball-and-player collisions and the lower body engine that provides players with more robust lower body control. New cameras have been added to the world environment to add a more realistic feel and players can now react to changes on the pitch more realistically, while the new Layers system lets the A.I. decide how to act depending on the situation on the pitch, showing players and opponents in a HUD.
