Ovarian transplantation has been proposed as a method to restore endocrine function in women with premature ovarian failure (POF) or menopause after surgery. However, there is no information of the potential effect of the ovarian transplants on reproduction in women. The aim of the present study was to investigate the effect of ovarian transplants on pregnancy rate after mating of transplanted and non-transplanted mice. Ovarian transplantations were carried out by donor mouse removal of ovaries and ectopic transfer of ovaries. The ovaries were transplanted into the peritoneum of recipients. Donor mice were of both sexes (n=15), including 8-10 weeks old, weighing 20-25 g. Recipients (n=28) were also of both sexes (n=16), including 8-10 weeks old, weighing 21-24 g. Four weeks after the transplantation, mice were mated with normal mice, and vaginal plugs were checked at 2 days after mating. We also used recipient mice lacking oocyte (Ctrl-/-/Ov) to examine the effect of oocyte on pregnancy rate. Pregnancy rate was evaluated at 11-12 weeks after mating. When donor mouse was sham operated or transplanted with normal ovaries, pregnancy rate was not affected. In contrast, the transplantation of ovaries in recipients resulted in a significantly lower pregnancy rate, compared to sham-operated control mice, with no effect on recipients lacking oocytes. The results suggested that the graft of ovaries in recipients had a contraceptive effect in vivo.[Subcutaneous adipose tissue as an adjunct of radiotherapy for cervical cancer].
