Q: What is the behavior of this assembly compiler? I am using the free version of an assembly compiler called Gas (it's free version of Code::Blocks but I don't care) and I tried to compile this code: `int main(void) { int k = 10; int x = k * 2 + 3; int y = x + k; printf("%d %d ", k, x); printf("%d %d ", k, y); return 0; }` and got this error: `error: instruction size override 'mov' must be` [Application of high-resolution esophageal manometry for esophageal-gastric junction evaluation in gastroesophageal reflux disease]. High-resolution esophageal manometry (HREM) is a technique used to evaluate esophageal motility. It has been applied in the evaluation of esophageal motility in gastroesophageal reflux disease (GERD). This study was aimed to explore the value of HREM in the evaluation of esophageal-gastric junction (EGJ). The esophageal and EGJ function of 122 GERD patients were compared by HREM, endoscopy and symptom assessments. We found that HREM could objectively measure the esophageal function of EGJ and the esophagogastric pressure-induced barrier was significantly lower than that in normal controls ( $P = 0.02$ ,  $P = 0.01$ ). When defined as abnormal, the diagnostic sensitivity and specificity were 84.8% and 90.1%, respectively. There was no significant difference between the two indices of EGJ and es

(Reuters) - The Federal Communications Commission has agreed to review the agency's net neutrality rules and will ask the U.S. Congress for further guidance on how it should interpret the rules, the FCC said on Wednesday. FILE PHOTO: The Federal Communications Commission (FCC) logo is seen outside the Federal Communication Commission in Washington, U.S. on December 14, 2014. REUTERS/Yuri Gripas The move came after a May 18 order by the U.S. Supreme Court, which struck down FCC rules that require broadband providers to offer equal access to online content and services. The court's opinion was a blow to internet companies, which wanted to ensure they could not be shut out of so-called "open internet" networks. Internet companies say the rules were a way to keep the internet open and free of hidden charges, which they say are far more widespread than companies have been willing to admit. In its statement on Wednesday, the FCC said it would conduct a review of its net neutrality rules. It said a review will be conducted by the agency's chief information officer and is not tied to the May 18 court ruling. The FCC said its review will seek comments from the public, broadband providers, consumer groups, advocacy organizations, content and platform providers, and trade associations. One person will review submissions to ensure they are based on "the facts" and do not "rest on the basis of speculation, misleading, or inaccurate assertions," the FCC said. "In so doing, we will follow the guidance that the Supreme Court sets forth in its opinion, as well as the Commission's current interpretation of those rules," the statement said. The FCC's net neutrality rules were designed to prevent broadband providers from blocking or slowing traffic. U.S. broadband providers such as AT&T Inc and Comcast Corp have said they will make sure they do not block or slow websites and content, even if they are asked to do so by regulators. The FCC said on Wednesday it will seek comments on how to interpret the court's decision, which struck down rules protecting "open internet," or open access rules. "Commenters are invited to use the discussion to help inform the agency on the proper interpretation and application of the Court's instruction in this case as it relates to the Commission◆
