Acne rosacea, vitiligo and psoriasis are the most common conditions reported to the Department of Veterans Affairs. Dermatologists have assessed the severity of 941 skin conditions in a study, which found that acne rosacea, vitiligo and psoriasis are the most common conditions reported to the Department of Veterans Affairs. The doctors at five VA medical centres assessed 904 dermatology patients on a scale from 0 to 3 for their skin condition, from mild to severe. The most common condition was acne rosacea, a common condition in young adults, which was estimated to affect one in three of the study patients. Acne rosacea was followed by vitiligo, an autoimmune disease resulting in white patches of skin that can be lifelong. Then came psoriasis and premenstrual stress, which affected 9% of patients. Acne rosacea, vitiligo and psoriasis were the most common conditions reported to the Department of Veterans Affairs Papulosquamous diseases affecting the skin — including psoriasis and eczema — affected 14% of patients, and the condition also had a higher female to male ratio than any other category. Dermatologists assessed other skin conditions including chronic hand eczema, chronic hand dermatitis and other eczema. However, they didn't appear in the top 10 as frequently as the three listed above. e79caf774b
