Any successful candidate needs to have 3.3 to 3.8 years of experience of the required knowledge, skills and T-cell stimulators reveal lymphocyte subpopulations with particular polyreactivity patterns. Mouse lymphocytes were tested for their ability to stimulate 3H-T-cell proliferation as well as pokeweed mitogen (PWM)-dependent antibody production by day-11 thymocytes in vitro. In initial studies of MRL-lpr/lpr mice and C3H/HeJ mice carrying the lpr defect, it was found that there was enhanced sensitivity to DBA/2 as a stimulator of T-cell proliferation, the effect being particularly prominent on the anti-L3T4 marker. This difference in sensitivity was reproduced in DBA/2 splenocytes to the same degree as in MRL-lpr/lpr lymphocytes and the difference was not observed in the T-cell-independent antibody response. Examination of the effect of lymphocyte-derived mitogen on the growth of DBA/2 and MRL-lpr/lpr T cells revealed that

A 10-year-old girl visited our outpatient clinic with a chief complaint of double vision. Visual acuity was 0.5 in both eyes, with laterally deviated eyes. Visual fields were hand movement bilaterally. Comitant esotropia was diagnosed and surgery was planned. Under topical anesthesia, maximum surgical correction was performed, after which she had left gaze preference. When her visual acuity, strabismus and glaucoma were examined, it was found that she had open-angle glaucoma bilaterally. She also had right exotropia. Only the left eye had esotropia. To the best of our knowledge, an association of bilateral open-angle glaucoma and esotropia is less than one percent. In contrast, the incidence of esotropia among patients with glaucoma is 2-3 percent. We postulate that our patient may have had a congenital form of esotropia, based on the bilateral open-angle glau d0c515b9f4
