Part #1 By Joe Khoury We're pleased to be able to reveal today that the source code, cheat engine engine, and FLOSS independent framework that let us create the DFCS for FSX is now available for download. For more information on the source data and notes on how we extracted it from the BE, please see our GitHub Wiki pages for the CH-47D. We'd also like to personally thank the DFCS Development Team and John Thompson for their invaluable contributions. Thanks too to Dan Laucey and Richard Eringa for contributing their respective Boeing and Vertol data. There is much more to come! Main Menu About Joe Hello, my name is Joe Khoury and I am the founder of EAH/Electronic Arts Hacker. I began working with EA in 2003 as their lead FSX multiplayer engineer and since then I have lead and contributed to teams that have created content for most of the EA titles, including the Command series, DICE, Visceral, Snow Leopard Games, Janus, etc. My team was the first to bring the FSX community the FedEx and UPS Warthogs, the C-17A and the Duke aircraft, the Otter and the Vampire. I have also worked on the entire Command Ops series as well as the Air Warrior content. My modding history includes working on the X-Plane, X-Plane 11, Prepar3D and P3D editors, plus a number of the Prophet and Radial Wings apps. In my free time, I have a passion for flight simulation and currently I am the FSX Steam Edition benchmark champion. I spend most of my time playing PCU/VR and PCU-XS (X-plane Extremesim). A Bit About the DFCS The Dynamic Flight Compatibility Scenarios (DFCS) are the flight sim community's "dream team" of add-ons that make flight simulation living (and enjoyable) on multiple flight sim software platforms. The DFCS are add-ons that take advantage of features that vary from platform to platform, such as engine, wing modification, autopilot and FMC configuration. In FSX/SE, many of the DFCS are already available, and additional DFCS are being added each month, including the US Army's Blackhawk (available to download today) and Bell Boeing's AH
