I have an original Windows 7 Home Premium 32 bit, when I create folders in Windows 7 64 bit the folder size is different. I mean the folder size is 3 GB while the same folder size in Windows 7 32 bit is 2 GB. But I still want my original folder size and same size of the exe file. You must have a different definition of the size of the file than the machine. To get the size of a file, use File Properties in Win 7, or tools to open a file for editing in the Win 7 environment. For folder sizes on Win 7, it's usually the reserved space plus the reserved room for administrator use. I agree with you, the size of file and folder is different and I want my same size of folder and exe file. 1. Are you sure the previous Windows 32 bit version was installed on your computer? 2. In Windows it does not matter whether you're running 32 bit or 64 bit; all the same space would be available. 3. If you want the same size of folder and exe file, you just have to move the folder files to your new machine without changing anything else, and only copy the EXE files and do not forget to copy the files that are already on your PC to your new Windows 7 PC. The EXE file and folder file size will not change. Ask a Computer Guy Sep 7, 2012 Asked by: Mike Hello, I want to have the same folder size with the original folders and exe file. This will not work. You'll have to either install both versions, or find another 64 bit PC to copy the data to. Or, you might consider upgrading your existing PC to 64 bit. If your experience with it is good. Ask a Computer Guy Sep 7, 2012 Asked by: Curtiss Yes, I'm sure that the old PC is from 32 bit version. Ask a Computer Guy Sep 7, 2012 Asked by: Mike I have a problem with the renaming of a folder. When I try to make my PC compatible with Windows 7 64 bit. When I rename a
