While we've been anxiously awaiting confirmation of the Bosstones' forthcoming Nine Below Zero album, the band has decided to give the world the musical equivalent of a game-winning touchdown on the very first play. Last night, the band played a string of solo shows in Cleveland and Chicago, where they "performed five consecutive sets from beginning to end," according to the Boston Phoenix. Check out "The Stand" and "Daylight Savings" from one of their Chicago shows below.Q: Why do people say that Swing is dead? So, I heard that Swing is dead (along with all of its pals). Swing is obsolete. The move is away from UI abstraction and towards more and more libraries being built from scratch. But I'm a bit confused about these "obsolete" things. Java GUI frameworks: Look cool to use. Are built from the ground up. Then there are the frameworks that make this look obsolete (as you said), like... Libgdx (which looks pretty bad, but has a pretty nice transition and development model) Swing: as per the famous quote, what is the point of Swing? The last one, is a bit philosophical, but: Since when is Swing being used as a paradigm for UI's
