A: I would recommend using the 32-bit installation media. the 64-bit installation media often has issues with GCC 5.1.0.x - it would be worth testing this and trying the 32-bit version and see if the issue still occurs. The issue has been raised with the KDE and Fedora team, but as yet there is no real fix. Q: Is it possible to add Google Analytics to my iOS app without use of Google Tag Manager? I've downloaded Google Analytics SDK for iOS from Google's developer site In the end of the documentation, I see how to add GA code to the application initialization code, but is it possible to separate these two parts so that it's possible to put google-analytics.js to be loaded on app start, and not at the application initialization. If not, is there any other solution to do this? I'm doing this for an educational purposes :) A: I don't think it's possible to load the analytics js file at app initialization. Instead, put it in your app's AppDelegate like this: - (BOOL)application:(UIApplication *)application openURL:(NSURL *)url options:(NSDictionary *)options sourceApplication:(NSString *)sourceApplication annotation:(id)annotation { ... [[UIApplication sharedApplication] openURL:myURL]; In my case, I add google-analytics.js to my app's bundle, then I just call the openURL-function, and that's it, I have loaded the analytics code correctly. Hope that helps. :) A: According to documentation analytics library supports SDK for iOS as well. You only need to include analytics.js in your project and then it's automatically loaded and ready to use. You only need to create GoogleService-Info.plist file and bundle it with your app. The service would be automatically installed if you have these prerequisites. After you have done these 6d1f23a050
